Project Overview

New York City Community School District 22, in consortium with New York City Community School District 21, is converting five traditional schools into whole-school magnet programs that are unique to and draw on the strengths of the five individual school communities. These programs create compelling, appealing, and innovative learning environments with state-of-the-art technology that engage students in a rigorous educational experience. These Magnet Schools Assistance Program (MSAP)–funded schools use research-based strategies (i.e., project-based learning and cultural competency) to promote student achievement and career readiness. The MSAP schools are creating diverse racial/ethnic and socioeconomic learning environments, increasing students' intercultural understanding, improving student learning, and expanding the districts' school choice options.
